

Day 4 – A Handwritten Monograph

A handwritten monograph on very large objects was found on Dr Black's body. Fortunately, Sherlock is an expert in both handwriting analysis, as well as the monograph's subject matter.

During breaks, I observed a number of immense bodies, starting with a member of the Gallic group, who is the smaller of the main splinters of another member. Another around the same host has a distinctive bright side and dark side. Slightly further in, one shares a path, sometimes exchanging paths even, with Janus. Hiding in the shadows, a trojan trails behind Dione.

Then, there is yet another body with two pockmarks, at present time affectionately identified as Pan and Gaia.

Delving much further into the distance, a body lies entirely inside, and shepherds Adams ring. Only the next irregular lies closer to the host and just slightly inside Le Verrier ring. This body found with the host is known to be extremely frosty, and experiences great activity on the surface.

I conclude this series of observations including special mention of a body which is unique for being the one and only prograde irregular around this host entity.
